There are others, however, who promote themselves as ‘LBL practitioners’ and ‘LBL teachers,’ yet are not members of MNI and have not trained with our organization, even though they claim affiliation with me and my life’s work of exploring the spiritual realm. Still others have had such training and membership in the past, but are no longer current members with up-to-date knowledge of MNI, its goals and the latest developments in our methodology. Some left our organization so quickly after their initial LBL training that they did not receive the monitored exposure and feedback from our regular members. Some offer ‘LBL training’ but have not, themselves, followed the training and preparation required by our organization to teach LBL. I can endorse only training programs run by the MNI training team and its approved Alliance Training affiliates. People have a right to choose their own paths in life, but too many of those who have left our LBL organization still use my name for their own personal gain and claim an inaccurate and misleading association with the methodology that grew out of my research. I am concerned about public perceptions. Unless they remain in the MNI membership, how can I vouch for their skill levels or even know if they are following our Code of Ethics in their conduct? Because of these issues, they have neither my endorsement nor my support. The MNI team works hard to evolve and develop LBL methodology, but focuses on maintaining the core principles of my original research.” Dr Michael Newton
